

The Sweeter Side of Halloween

Halloween is a time for ghouls, goblins, spooky stories and—most importantly—candy! Whether you trick-or-treat or not, it's hard to deny that candy is a staple for the holiday. Even so, the emphasis placed on Halloween candy may still surprise you.

One Click Retail, an e-commerce data and analysis firm, looked at the online shopping habits of Halloween consumers. They found that Amazon's candy sales grew 22% between November 2017 and April 2018. If that sounds too early, consider that search terms like "Halloween candy" began showing up as early as late July and skyrocketed in late August through mid-September (Thompson, 2018).

Not only are people buying their candy early, but they're buying a lot of it, too. A 2017 survey by ChargeItSpot found that 52% of shoppers reported that they would spend the majority of their Halloween budget on candy. The fact that 10% of shoppers planned to spend upwards of $500 on the holiday goes to show the staggering amount of candy that flies off the shelves every year (Renfrow, 2017)!

So what exactly are people buying? CandyStore.com looked at a decade of their sales data to find that M&Ms are their best-selling Halloween candy, closely followed by Reese's Cups, candy corn, and Skittles. The worst of the Halloween candy bunch, however? Circus Peanuts (Pullen, 2017).
